Statement to Higher Education Institutions Requiring TOEFL or CEFR of International Baccalaureate Diploma and Diploma Course Students

To whom it may concern

This statement is intended to clarify the proficiency in English of International Baccalaureate diploma and diploma course candidates who are offering this language. This statement relates to IB language courses for first examinations in 2013.

The IB currently offers the following language courses:

Group 1 – Studies in language and literature

English courses available in this group are:

- English A: Literature Higher level
- English A: Literature Standard level
- English A: Language and Literature Higher level
- English A: Language and Literature Standard level
- Literature and Performance Standard level

These courses are designed for students whose best language for academic work is English. A student registered for one of these courses will have no trouble with studying in English. Many will be applying for English literature or linguistics courses.

Group 2 – Language Acquisition

English courses available in this group are:

- English B Higher level
- English B Standard level
- English ab initio Standard level

English B Higher level and English B Standard level are highly likely to meet the criteria for CEFR level B2 in the four domains of reading, writing, listening and speaking. They are also both comparable with TOEFL requirements.

As its name implies, English ab initio is a beginner's course and universities may wish to check the level of English of any student offering it.

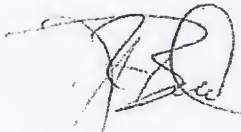

We would therefore consider it reasonable that students who have completed any of the above courses (apart from the ab initio) be spared the requirement to take TOEFL or other language proficiency assessments as part of the admissions procedures to your institution.

We will be pleased to support this statement by sending curriculum outlines and specimen examination papers if requested to do so.

This statement supersedes any previous pronouncements that relate to IB students' proficiency in English and university entrance.

Yours sincerely

Jeffrey Beard
